

Allen W. Dulles Talks at Church

The United States is carrying out many of the principles of the Monroe Doctrine on a world-wide basis, Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, declared yesterday.

Mr. Dulles spoke at a service during which documents taken from the old cornerstone of the Georgetown Presbyterian Church 3115 P street N.W., were transferred to a new cornerstone in the restored building.

President Monroe, himself, laid the original stone. Mr. Dulles took note of this, declaring that this country today has "many elements of similarity" with the problems faced by the Nation in 1821 when the original cornerstone was laid.

President Monroe, he pointed out, was trying to protect the new world republics against totalitarianism just as today the United States is attempting to help other countries fend off communism.

The Rev. Dr. Albert J. McCartney, minister emeritus of the National Presbyterian Church, prayed for President Eisenhower, who sent a letter to the church's congregation.

Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that the congregation was founded during the American Revolution. "The members," it read, "have demonstrated their belief in tolerance, their concern for education and their reliance on divine law. This building and the historical heritage it symbolizes surely will be a continuing inspiration."
